

ASSIGNMENT SHEET

Command Tour Charter (CTC) Assignment

Description:

During the course week, couples should begin (or continue) to define and discuss concerns, expectations and plans as a team approaching command together. In the process of doing this you should review personal vision statements and define personal, couple and family goals and priorities. Review “Considerations” to determine which ones you would like to address in your charter. Specifically discuss the spouse’s level of participation and involvement in the command and possible alternatives if required.

Requirement:

A presentation session scheduled on Friday afternoon will provide an opportunity for sharing the ideas developed by each CO and CO spouse team during the week. Each couple will have about five minutes to discuss their CTC. There is no minimum time requirement. Use any medium you desire in developing your charter; chart pack paper, index cards, Microsoft PowerPoint, a creative display, an interactive skit. There is no “school solution” for this assignment. Each CO and CO spouse team is unique and has different priorities, concerns and interests. At this time the process of developing the CTC is more important than the product. Your CTC will likely be adjusted several times before and during the command tour.

Intent:

The purpose of this exercise is not to determine how the command will operate or how the commander will command. The purpose is not to develop a plan for the official command team. *The effort is the development of a charter that spells out the personal relationship of the CO and CO spouse team during the command tour. What will each give to the experience? What may each expect from the other during the experience? Command mission may be a consideration, but focus is on the CO and CO spouse team.
